CASE STUDY

SHARED SWIPES AND FOOD PANTRIES HELP OVERCOME STUDENT FOOD INSECURITY

THREE CAMPUSES SHARE STRATEGIES

Food insecurity on campus is not unusual. The Hope Center found that 36 percent of university students in the United States were food insecure in the 30 days before a recent survey.

In response, institutions are raising awareness on campus and taking action. With swipe-exchange programs, students can anonymously give swipes to students who don't have a robust meal plan or who might run out of swipes before the end of the semester. Campus-affiliated food pantries also feed students.
